The new Cook at the Brownville Lyceum; Dave Mahoney

Dave's special menu for the Jazz Festival in Brownville was a hit. Here Dave is smoking sausages. A customer responded, "They're outstanding! I highly recommend them."

Shredded briskett, pulled pork, and chicken wings are three of Dave's other smoked specialties.

Inspire Others With Your Lifestyle Traits

Dorothy Rieke, Julian

“If your actions inspire others to dream more, learn more, do more and become more, you are a leader.” John Quincy Adams.

Inspiring others has many benefits. Doing this means that our lives must be “in order,” so we can influence others with good examples. Having our lives in order means developing admirable traits which inspire others. “If you light a lamp for someone else it will also brighten your path.” Buddha

With a passionate involvement, we develop traits that help us achieve, relate to others, and make our lives what we want them to be. These traits need to be in place and displayed daily during interactions with others.

What are some traits that inspire others?

GENEROSITY-- Generosity is the habit of giving without expecting anything in return. Everyone admires someone who is generous with their time, abilities, and money. It is offering time, assets or talents to aid someone in need.

CARING-- Show your caring with acts of kindness and compassion. “Kindness is tenderness. Kindness is love, but perhaps greater than love... Kindness is good will. Kindness says, ‘I want you to be happy.’” Randolph Ray.

MAKE PEOPLE FEEL GOOD ABOUT THEMSELVES-- People remember how you made them feel on certain occasions. Compliment people sincerely being truthful. Treat your friends and associates as if they are special, and they will soon reach your expectations.

HELP THOSE IN NEED-- Whether physically or mentally, be concerned with others helping in any way possible. “The best way to find yourself, is to lose yourself in the service of others.” Ghandi

FOCUS ON THE POSITIVE-- Positive attitudes inspire you and others to meet today’s events leading into tomorrow. Life events are faced according to our perspectives. Stay positive and expect the best, an attitude that will inspire others.

When we use our hearts to inspire others, our unique lifestyles lead us to live our lives joyously and inspire others to live their lives in the same way.

Workshop Sept. 11th & Sept. 26th

The Nebraska Senior Health Insurance Information Program [SHIIP], a division of the Nebraska Department of Insurance, is pleased to host the "Pick the Right Medicare Drug Plan" workshop in September. Each year Medicare drug plans make changes to the cost and coverage you receive. This class will cover many topics including closing of the 'donut hole,' other plan changes, available resources, and what to consider when comparing different options.

The Pick the Right Medicare Drug Plan workshop will be offered on two dates in September. The first will be Wednesday, September 11th from 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. at the Learning Center in Nebraska City, 819 Central Avenue. The workshop will be repeated on Thursday, September 26th from 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. at the Johnson Library, on Main Street in Johnson.

Medicare Part D and Part C open enrollment for 2020 begins October 15 and lasts until Dec. 7th. Be an informed consumer as you make decisions for your drug coverage. Mary Ann Holland, SHIIP-Certified Medicare Counselor, and retired Nebraska Extension Educator will be the presenter. This event is co-sponsored by Southeast Community College and the Nebraska Senior Health Insurance Information Program [SHIIP].

Tuition is being provided by the Nebraska SHIIP. There is no cost to attend the workshop, however participants must register to ensure adequate handout materials. To register, please visit the www.doi.ne.gov/shiip, or call 402-471-2841 at the SHIIP office.

Dean's Mountain Man Poem

Dean Nussbaum, Falls City

While hunting in the mountains one day
Found an old man dying where he lay

His face was all wrinkled, his beard white as sand
I could tell he was a mountain man

His rifle was a flintlock, she was a big bore
He carried his powder in a buffalo horn

He said set down son and I'll give you my word
Tell you a story about the Indian and a buffalo herd

The Indians were my friends for so many years
There were some I liked and some I feared

The bear was the animal that roamed the hills
But the buffalo herd was what gave me thrills

Now they're all gone, and there is nothing left to see
And now there is not much left of me

He said go away and let me stay
And let my spirit go to the mountain and stray

He closed his eyes and I walked away
That really happened while hunting in the mountains one day

HARVEST THE MOON

Now the corn and beans are dry, and the monster machines are charging down the rows of plenty, throwing up clouds of dust so dense that forms are only guesses hiding in the choking debris. The fiery disk of the sun goes down behind the hills in a ruby haze, as the assault in the fields continues. Glaring lights blast through the night rows, as farmers push their envelope of time before the weather turns mean. Later, with work completed, tired men raise their eyes to the rise of the great gold coin of the moon, and drink in it's beauty and the promise of another fruitful harvest season.

SUMMER TEARS

The sweat of summer is pouring out it's last tears of misery, as days start to close the curtains of darkness earlier. Mornings dawn soaked in fog over rivers that never stop rolling. Bright spots of color appear among trees still unaware of their coming fate. Then, like a tidal wave of warm, foliage explodes with the fire of frost. Against the background of a passing storm, sun beams flash over hills of gold and dusky red, glowing against the gloom of gray. Colorful carpets appear under trees that have thrown their dresses down. Bare limbs look sad at being empty and alone. They are shocked to be robbed so soon of all their glory, but early frost can come, suddenly.

APPLE DELIGHT

If they could talk they wouldn't be talking. They'd be screaming. "Help, get this weight off of my arm, and my other arm, and all my other arms!" They are the fragrant trees that bloomed in spring, whose blossoms grew into fruit born in a good year. Swarms of people are coming to the orchards to rescue these victims of good taste. They will buy all the apples they can stuff into their cars and trucks. Not to mention the gallons of sweet cider and jams and other yummys to be found. Gold glows in the autumn sky as the day blazes into a mellow evening. Visitors don't notice the branches waving to them as they depart. Nor do they hear the joyful shouts of relief. "Thank you, thank you all—we feel so much lighter now. Please come back next year!"

MAGIC WINGS

Summer is shutting down in so many subtle ways. Even when heat spikes in the afternoon, the sun is being dragged down by the tilt of our planet as it zips around it's orbit. Dusk appears sooner and temperatures back off, even if humidity is dripping from the air. Then a marvelous feat begins, as the velvet wings of the Monarchs start casually drifting through our cities and towns and countryside. They seem to hover in random patterns, with soft breezes nudging their weightless bodies along. But they have a travel plan that is as old as their ancient ancestors. Without plane reservations, they will fly hundreds of miles south on dainty wings as thin as paper. When they reach their destination, they'll gather in a forest. Alighting on the branches, they will crowd together in a mass of flutter, until the fall of night, when they sleep together under the light of the Milky Way.

RULES OF NATURE

It seems that every so many years, history starts all over again, despite evidence to the contrary. Things that grandparents can remember, like massive floods or World War II, seem like a fantasy to some grandchildren. "If we didn't see it happen, it wasn't real," they imply with their wild theories about social changes and land management. "We believe in what we say, because we have to be right, and if you don't agree with us, then you are our enemy. Forget voting rights, freedom of speech, and the constitution, because we know what you need, and we will be the ones who give it to you." But, the bulldozer of time has shown that the truth will win, every time. The mighty river has proven that nature's rules can't be broken, anymore than people can be broken into shadows of themselves.

CHOOSING SIDES

The cries of battle echo off the stadium walls and drift across town, carrying excitement and challenge on the chilly wind of an autumn evening filled with competition. Warriors are ready to fight for victories that will live in their hearts and memories, as will the disappointments of defeats that linger like promises never filled. Tomorrow is only a foggy thought, as young players grasp today like it will last forever. Down the road, winners and losers will mature together, forging new bonds, despite their old wars. They will discover, to their surprise, that we are all in the game of life together, and that it is more important to care about each other than it is to win.

Diary of a Part-time Naturalist

Merri Johnson, Auburn

Did you know that bumble bees can be trained? Seriously, they have been taught to move a tiny ball onto a specific spot on a platform in order to receive a reward of sugar water delivered with an eye dropper. When offered several tiny balls to choose from, they choose the one nearest to the designated spot. And when an untrained bee is added to the test, that bee learns by watching the trained bee. I find that amazing.

That was just one of several things I learned about bumble bees at training I recently attended. I can hear your brains buzzing right now wondering why I took a class on bumble bees. You are probably not aware, but the Xerces Society has created the Nebraska Bumble Bee Atlas. That's great! you're saying, right? But what the heck is a Bumble Bee Atlas? It's a survey of – you guessed it – bumble bee populations in Nebraska. That is so cool, you're thinking right now, right? But what's the point?

Well, I'll just tell you what the point is, my until-now-uninformed readers. Bees – not butterflies – are the most important pollinators for human food. And bumble bees have the rare ability to vibrate themselves to keep warm, allowing them to fly at colder temperatures, and therefore, thrive in northern climates like Nebraska's. Alas, bumble bees are in decline across the entire country, and we need to find out why and do something about it if we want to keep eating well. Taste tests have actually demonstrated that tomatoes pollinated by bumble bees taste better than tomatoes pollinated by other means in greenhouses. There's just something about those hairy little bumble bee legs collecting all that pollen and rubbing it off on other plants that can't be replicated.

Nebraska has a history of documenting bumble bee distributions going back to the 1960s. If you're my age, you don't need to read a history book to know that land use and therefore bumble bee habitat has changed dramatically since then. So, collecting data on the existence of bumble bees in the state now, and comparing it to historical records will help to demonstrate how bumble bee distribution has changed over time, as well as permitting assessment of the impact of land use changes on bumble bee populations.

That's why I took a class on bumble bees. I am one of several dozen volunteers who will be surveying football-field-size sites around the state in the next month to identify the species of bumble bees in those areas, as well as the species of flowering plants available to the bees. Our data and photographs will be analyzed and confirmed by bumble bee experts. In turn, those experts will make recommendations about improving habitat to conserve bumble bees.

Hubby and I made a reconnaissance road trip yesterday to locate two public wildlife sites in Richardson County for me to survey. One was pretty easy to find, but the other was a real adventure. We wandered around and backtracked over several miles of low or no-maintenance roads in the Four-mile Creek area. It's fair to say that Hubby was becoming slightly irritated by the lack of signage and finally had to ask a farmer who was out mowing the roadside for directions. Once we found the access lane (no sign) and drove down a half-mile of what looked like a field drive, we finally found a sign confirming that we were in the right place.

All that exploration is part of the fun of being involved in nature activities. If you would like to learn more about this bumble bee project, check out www.BumbleBeeWatch.org. And if you'd like to really get involved in conserving all aspects of Nebraska's natural legacy, visit the Nebraska Master Naturalist program site at www.nebraskamasternaturalist.org. There is an event coming up soon at Fontenelle Forest in Bellevue, NE, that may also interest you. Feel free to contact me if you would like information about that when it becomes available. A Labor of Love

Janet Sobczyk, Omaha

This summer I moved a library.

I didn't move near a library. I literally moved a small school's library from one room to another down the hall. Actually, students helped pack the books into boxes last May. Then they stacked them in the lobby.

In July I began sorting them out because the new space is smaller than the old library space was. I weeded out duplicates and old books that hadn't been checked out in years. I looked at every book card to make sure so I wouldn't get rid of a well-worn favorite by mistake.

The second day into the project someone asked for donations for an organization that ships thin, paperback books to a school in Uganda. They received five large boxes; it felt great to see them put to good use.

The rest of the weeded-out books were boxed for a charitable organization here in Omaha, then we loaded them into two school vans. I drove one of the vans myself and acted like a mother hen as they were unloaded. I love books, and needed reassurance they would make their way into children's hands from there.

The huge pile of books to keep I had already loaded onto the shelves as fast as I could. The goal of getting the lobby cleared out by the start of school had been a palpable weight on my shoulders, but the mission was accomplished. Organizing the books in ABC and Dewey order will still take some time, but it's looking like a library already.

I know the administration appreciated all my work. However, when my daughter (a student at the school) walked in and immediately found items she wanted to check out, that was all the thanks I needed.

Window On Fifth Street

Stephen Hassler, Peru

These days I can hear the sounds of roof repair through my Window on Fifth Street. Many homes in Peru, Nebraska were damaged by a twenty minute hail storm on June 25th, including mine. I have received favorable service from my insurance company, but if you think your company might be “holding back” regarding their contractual obligation, let me tell you what has worked for me and what I learned while I was an insurance agent in Nebraska and Colorado.

Usually, when an individual has damage to insured property, they call their agent, who asks questions and fills out a claim report. After that things can get frustrating. I won't go too deep into detail regarding the issues some of my friends and neighbors have told me about, but you should have a contractor check your roof for damage, unless you know that your insurance company represents your best interests.

Consider “putting your claim in writing.” You shouldn't have to do that, but if you don't like what you are hearing, put your claim in writing in an old-fashioned letter and send it to your insurance company. And whether you think you might need help or not, copy it to the Nebraska State Insurance Commission. It's been my experience that once the insurance company knows they are being monitored by the State that issued their license, they reconsider their behavior.

But keep in mind that the state of Nebraska is “insurance business friendly.” That's why so many insurance companies have their home offices (big buildings), in Omaha and Lincoln. So you might end up doing battle with two institutions. But that's better than giving up. And if you do favor State government over Federal, insist that it work for you.

If you choose to accept cash instead of repairs, your company might exclude the roof from coverage due to the existing damage, or cancel your policy. If you become so frustrated that you decide to change companies, don't expect your new company to cover a roof that has existing damage. My insurance agent's info is in the ad on page six. They sell “replacement cost” policies. Does your company deduct an amount for “depreciation?” Where is your policy? I don't know where mine is either.

My truck also received hail damage. I received my check for my truck's damage about a month ago. It and a little out of pocket was enough to pay off my loan. No more monthly payment!

Keep the following in mind if you think you're a “little guy” and can't win; it is often not the case of who is bigger, but rather, who is right. Last resort? Arrange a free 15 or 30 minute consultation with an attorney.
